

SYDNEY RARO DIRECT

Air New Zealand will from July operate direct services between Sydney and the Cook Islands, making it the first airline to operate direct services between the two nations. Flights will operate once a week for a four month trial period during the peak holiday season of July to October.

The seventeen return services on a Sunday from Sydney and Friday from Rarotonga will be operated by a 223 seat Boeing 767-300 with a configuration of 199 economy and 24 business class seats. Flight time for the 5,000km journey is six hours from Sydney and seven hours 15 minutes from Rarotonga.

Air New Zealand already carries a large number of passengers between Australia and the Cook Islands via Auckland. The Cook Islands, including Aitutaki, is a very attractive destination to Australian travellers looking for a unique South Pacific experience.
